

Robert Watts

A graduate of the John F. Kennedy School of Government, Harvard University, and fellow at the Harvard Law School, Robert Watts has been involved in Indigenous issues for more than 30 years. Currently, he is the Associate Vice President of Aboriginal Relations at the Nuclear Waste Management Organization. In addition, he is adjunct professor and fellow at Queens University in the School of Policy Studies and is a member of the Leadership Council to McGill University's Institute for the Study of International Development Relations. Previously, he was Chief of Staff and Chief Executive Officer for the Assembly of First Nations (AFN) and Interim Executive Director of the Canada's Truth and Reconciliation Commission. A former public servant he was an Assistant Deputy Minister with the federal government and senior executive with the province of Ontario. He has taught, debated and lectured at a number of universities in Canada and the United States and at the Canada School of Public Service. Robert is of Mohawk and Ojibway ancestry and resides at the Six Nations Reserve.